ABSTRACT

This report, based on data from the 1980 U.S. Bureau of the Census, examines the geographic locations of artists and summarizes the numbers of artists and their basic characteristics for each state and the major Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas (SMSA). It also compares 1970 and 1980 populations of employed artists in each state and presents geographic movements of artists from 1975 to 1980, both regionally and into the major SMSAs. The data indicate that artists are concentrated in large metropolitan areas and that New York City and Los Angeles are the major artist centers. Artists average one percent of the U.S. civilian labor force, or 1 out of every 96 workers in the United States. Thirty percent live in California or New York compared to 18 percent of the general U.S. population. California ranks first in artist population, a position held by New York in 1970. Artists continue to move to the western and southern regions of the United States, shown in the increased migration figures from 1975 to 1980. Fifteen data tables are included. Appendices which make up the bulk of the report provide: (1) migration data by U.S. census geographic division, 1975-1980; (2) summary data on artists' residences for the states and principal SMSAs, 1980; and (3) artists' occupations and industrial classifications for the states and SMSAs. ARTISTS BY PLACE OF RESIDENCE: 1980

INTRODUCTION

This is the fourth of a series of reports on artists, based on data from the 1980 U.S. census for a set of 11 arts-related occupations. The first report in the series, Trends in the Artist Occupations, 1970-1980, provides general information on the sex, ethnic composition, age, labor force participation, education and earnings of artists. The second report, The Distribution of Artists Among Industrial Sectors, is a more detailed analysis of the different types of industries that employ artists. The third report, Earnings of Artists: 1980, provides comparative data on artists' earnings, considering variations among occupations, differences of sex or ethnic background, and other factors.

The present report examines the geographic locations of artists, summarizing the numbers of artists and their basic characteristics, for each state and the major SMSA's (standard metropolitan statistical areas). This report also compares 1970 and 1980 populations of employed artists in each state, and shows geographic movements of artists during the 1975-80 period, both regionally and into the major SMSA's.

The 11 artist occupational titles used in this analysis, along with their three-digit Bureau of the Census OCS (Occupational Classification System) codes, are:

- actors and directors (OCS Code 187);
- announcers (OCS Code 198);
- architects (OCS Code 043);
- postsecondary art, drama, and music teachers (OCS Code 137);
- authors (OCS Code 183);
- dancers (OCS Code 193);
- designers (OCS Code 185);
- musicians and composers (OCS Code 186);
- painters, sculptors, craft artists, and artist printmakers (OCS Code 188);
- photographers (OCS Code 189); and
- artists, performers, and related workers, N.E.C. ("Not Elsewhere Classified"--OCS Code 194).

The experienced civilian labor force included over a million persons in these 11 occupations in 1980. Data in this report include all persons 16 years of age and over who were currently working in an artist occupation or had previously worked in an artist occupation and were looking for work at the time of the census.

People in artist occupations are found in impressive numbers in all the states. Artists average 1.04 percent of the total U.S. experienced civilian labor force, or one out of every 96 workers in the U.S. They are concentrated, however, in a few major markets. Of the more than one million artists in the United States in 1980, about 30 percent made their homes in California or New York State. In comparison, 18 percent of the general U.S. population lived in these two states. California now ranks first in artist population--a position held by New York in 1970. Like the general population, artists continue to move to the western and southern regions of the country, with migration up slightly during the 1975-80 period compared to rates a decade earlier.

Artists continue to be concentrated in large metropolitan areas, with 86 percent living in urban areas in 1980, compared to 75 percent of the general U.S. population. New York City and the Los Angeles area continue to be the major centers for artists.

This report provides more detailed information on these topics. In Section I, a series of tabulations provides comparative rankings of the states, for 1970 and 1980, for artist occupations. Section II provides information on the migration of artists. Section III summarizes the major findings on state and SMSA differences in artist populations. The section then gives capsule descriptions of the 1980 artist data for each of the 50 states and the District of Columbia. These are arrangeed in alphabetical order by state. Appendices A through E provide the detailed data tabulations on which the analysis is based.

I. 1970-1980 TRENDS IN STATE RESIDENCE FOR EMPLOYED ARTISTS

Table 1 compares employed artists living in each state, ranking states by their 1970 and 1980 artist populations. Census data show growth in artist populations in all 50 states between 1970 and 1980. However, some of this growth is due to changes during the 1970's in the way the Census defined some of the artist occupations. In particular, theatrical and motion picture directors and production workers, and certain types of designers, were not counted as artists in 1970, but were included in these fields in 1980. At the national level, the effects of these definitional changes are known. They cause estimates of the overall rate of growth over the decade for the 11 artist occupations to be inflated. Unadjusted Census data suggests that the number of persons in the 11 artist occupations increased by nearly 80 percent between 1970 and 1980, but when allowances are made for changes in the ways artists were counted, this estimated growth rate drops to just over 50 percent. This is still far more growth than was experienced by the experienced civilian labor force in general.[1]

Adjustments to allow for definitional changes had not been made to the state level data at the time of this writing. The 1980 numbers in Table 1 include film directors and production staff, and the expanded group of designer occupations; the figures for 1970 do not count such persons. This bias could affect the rankings, because the added types of workers are not evenly distributed across all geographic areas.

The leading states are California, New York, Texas, Illinois, and Florida. Florida, ranked 9th in numbers of artists in 1970, moved into the 5th position in 1980. Other fast rising states include North Carolina, which moved from 19th position to 14th, and Georgia, from 20th to 15th.

Wyoming was the state with the lowest number of employed artists in 1980, a position held by Alaska a decade earlier. Alaska moved up to the 48th position in 1980, with four times more artists in 1980 than 1970. Connecticut dropped the most, from 13th place in 1970 to 21st in 1980.

Tables 2-11 show how state rankings have changed for each of ten artist occupations. Among actors and directors, California leads with over 15,000 employed in the occupation, followed by New York, Texas, Florida, and Illinois. Virginia is one of the fastest rising states in numbers of actors and directors, moving from 15th place in actor population in 1970 to 6th place in 1980. Overall, the changes in Census definitions contribute to very large increases in the number of employed workers in this group.

The largest numbers of announcers are in California, but Texas is close behind with more than 3,000 employed announcers in 1980. States that moved ahead substantially in announcer populations since 1970 include Virginia, Kentucky, South Carolina and Alaska.

[1] See "Estimating Rates of Growth," pp. 5-9, Trends in the Artist Occupations, 1970-1980, draft final report prepared for the Research Division, National Endowment for the Arts, by Diane C. Ellis (Rosslyn, Virginia: Data Use and Access Laboratories, May, 1984).

California has over 17,000 employed architects--more than twice as many as second-ranked New York State. Florida increased its numbers of architects, moving from 9th position to 4th between 1970 and 1980; Colorado and Arizona also moved well ahead of other states during the decade.

1970 rankings of states for postsecondary art, drama, and music teachers were not available, and this group is skipped in this analysis. Authors were more likely to live in New York in 1970, but by 1980 employment for authors was highest in California, where they more than doubled during the decade, to 10,540. New York remained close with 9,420 employed authors. All other states had less than 1,800 employed authors, with Illinois and Massachusetts in third and fourth place. Illinois and Texas doubled their author populations, while Colorado was one of the fastest rising states in numbers of authors, tripling its author population between 1970 and 1980. South Carolina, Louisiana, and Maine also substantially increased their numbers of employed authors.

Dancers are the only artists who are still more likely to live in New York than California. The number of employed dancers more than doubled in New York between 1970 and 1980, to 1,980. Other states with large numbers of employed dancers are California, Texas, Florida, Nevada, and Hawaii.

Employed designers are another occupation that resembles the overall rankings. California has 45,000, New York has 41,280. Texas has nearly 20,000 designers and moved from 9th place in the 1970 rankings to 3rd place in 1980. Illinois is 4th with over 17,000 employed designers.

Musicians and composers continue to live and work in California in larger numbers than any other state. California has over 19,000 employed musicians and composers, increasing 60 percent over the decade. New York State has over 15,000, followed by Texas and Florida. Georgia and Florida were the fastest rising states in the rankings between 1970 and 1980; Georgia moved from 19th to 13th position and Florida moved from 7th to 4th.

California is home for nearly 24,000 employed artists who are painters, sculptors, craft artists and printmakers. New York, which had ranked first in 1970 for these types of workers, now has 19,360 employed artists in these occupations, more than double the number in Texas, which now ranks third. The fastest rising states in the 1970-80 rankings are Texas, Florida, Virginia, and Washington state.

Photographers also live in California in greater numbers than in any other state, with New York second and Texas third. There were 12,240 employed photographers in California in 1980. Florida, Tennessee, and Oregon are among the fastest rising states in the 1970-80 rankings.

Other artists, performers and related workers (those "not elsewhere classified," or "N.E.C.") also follow trends similar to the overall artist occupations, with more in California than in any other state.

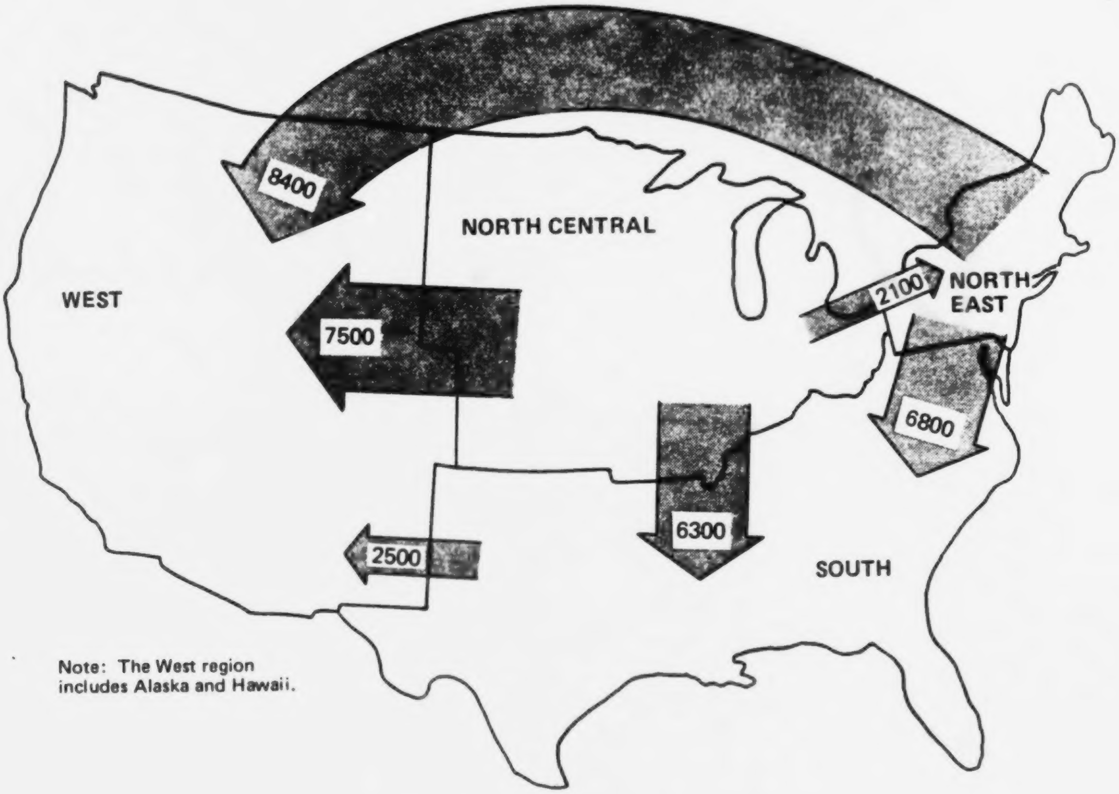
II. MIGRATION OF ARTISTS

Regional Migration. Movement of people into the southern and western regions of the United States is a trend that began in the 1960's. Artists have followed this trend, and by 1980 more artists lived in the South and West than in the Northeast and North Central regions. The South leads, with 292,100 artists. The West had 286,300 artists in 1980; the Northeast, 280,800; and the North Central region had 225,300.

During the 1975-1980 period, more artists moved into the West than to any other region. The West attracted about 18,400 new artists from migration alone. The South netted 13,100 new artists, while the Northeast lost about the same number. The North Central region lost the most, with 15,900 artists moving elsewhere. Movements into and out of the United States netted this country an additional 2,500 artists. In total, about 22,500 artists who were either immigrants or American artists living abroad came to this country between 1975-1980, while about 20,000 artists left the country. Figure 1, below, shows the direction of net migration flows for artists among the four U.S. regions between 1975 and 1980.

Figure 1

DIRECTION OF NET MIGRATION FLOWS FOR ARTISTS, 1975-1980



Note: The West region includes Alaska and Hawaii.

During this five-year period, nine percent of artists, or about 100,000 persons, moved from one region of the country to another. The migration rate is slightly higher than it was a decade earlier, when eight percent of artists moved interregionally. Artists in certain occupations had a much higher migration rate, as shown in Table 12, below. Nearly 15 percent of actors and directors moved across regions, mostly from the Northeast to West. The rate for dancers was 14 percent, with the Northeast region gaining the most dancers--a movement in the opposite direction of other artists and the population in general. Art, drama and music teachers had the next highest migration rate, at 13.5 percent. Teachers moved primarily out of the Northeast; a large number also moved from the North Central region to the South. Authors headed West in the late 1970's, with 12 percent moving regionally. Artists in the other occupations were less likely to move, with designers and photographers moving least. These rates are slightly higher for most artist occupations than they were during the 1965-70 period. High unemployment during the 1970's for actors and dancers would have contributed to their moving. Migration among teachers of art, drama and music is probably more affected by the nationwide system of colleges and universities which employ this artist group.

The artist occupations also gained members through immigration, also shown in Table 12. Of all dancers in 1980, 5.4 percent had moved in from abroad during the previous five years. This was the highest immigration rate of the 11 artist occupations.

Sub-Regional Migration. This study also examined movement of artists among sub-regions or divisions of states to better understand regional migration trends between 1975 and 1980. As stated earlier, the West netted about 18,400 new artists through migration from other U.S. regions. About two-thirds of the artists moving into the West went to the Pacific states (California, Oregon, Washington, Alaska and Hawaii). The other third went to the Mountain states (New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Wyoming, Idaho and Montana). However, within the western region there was considerable movement out of the Pacific states and into the Mountain states -- about eight percent of artists living in the Mountain division in 1980 were living in the Pacific division in 1975. This is the highest percentage of inter-division movement among all the state divisions. What appears to be happening is that new artists may move into the Pacific states, especially California, but artists who have been on the Pacific coast a while are moving inland to the Mountain states. By 1980, 27% of artists in the Mountain states had migrated in during the preceding five years. As shown in Table 13 the Mountain states have the highest percentage of artists who are recent migrants.

In the South, which attracted a net of 13,100 artists through migration, most artists went to the South Atlantic states (Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida). A smaller proportion went to the West South Central states (Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana). The East South Central states (Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi and Alabama) gained a small number of artists through migration.

In the Northeast, which had a net loss of over 13,000 artists as a result of migration, most artists went to the Pacific and South Atlantic states.

The North Central states followed a trend similar to the Northeast, losing most of their migrating artists to the South Atlantic and Pacific states.

Table 13 shows that the movement of artists around the country resulted in the Mountain states having the greatest percentage of new migrant artists, while the East North Central region had the smallest percentage of incoming artists. The New England states lost about 19 percent of their 1975 artist population to migration--the largest loss of any division--while the Pacific states lost only eight percent of their 1975 artist population--the smallest loss. Appendix A contains the detailed census numbers on which these data are based.

*Percent does not include artists who moved outside the United States.

Migration Into SMSA's. Art is an urban occupation. A quarter of all the artists in this country live in just five major urban regions. Artists might be born and raised anywhere, but eventually most of them move to cities, the centers of commerce and entertainment which provide audiences and markets for artists' work. New York and Los Angeles did not become the major homes for artists by breeding them--they attracted them from the outside. In 1980, 27 percent of artists in the Los Angeles-Long Beach metropolitan area were new arrivals since 1975. The statistics are similar for New York--25 percent of its artists had moved there within the previous five years, numbering over 26,000 new workers in the 11 artist occupations.

Among the top 19 SMSA's (those with at least 10,000 artists in all), the Seattle-Everett SMSA attracted the largest proportion of artists, with 41 percent of its artists moving in during 1975-1980. Most of these artists moved in from elsewhere in the United States, but 6 percent came from abroad. As shown in Table 14, below, other SMSA's with a high proportion of migrant artists were Houston (41 percent), Boston (35 percent), Anaheim-Santa Ana-Garden Grove (34 percent), Denver-Boulder (30 percent), and Washington, D.C. (28 percent). Among the major metropolitan areas, Philadelphia was least attractive to artists; less than 10 percent of its artist population consisted of new arrivals. Table 15 on the next page shows which SMSA's had the highest proportion of migrant artists for specific occupations.

III. STATE AND SMSA SUMMARIES

The states and SMSA's vary greatly in the size and composition of their artist populations. For example, although women are a minority of artists nationwide, in some states and specific occupational groups they are a majority. As noted in Section I, artists are concentrated in California and New York.

A set of tables has been prepared, providing selected summary data on persons in the 11 artist occupations in all 50 states plus the District of Columbia; a second set provides similar information for the 25 standard metropolitan statistical areas (SMSA's) with at least 8,000 artists. The state tables are in Appendix B of this report; the SMSA tables are in Appendix C. These tables contain data on the experienced civilian labor force of artists. This includes both employed artists and unemployed artists who were looking for work at the time of the 1980 Census. For comparative purposes, a matched table with summary statistics for the entire U.S. is provided at the beginning of Appendix B. Appendices D and E show the distribution of artists in 30 detailed industries for each state and major SMSA'S. The following is a brief summary of the main points of interest in these materials.

States: According to the 1980 census, California had 176,321 artists in its civilian labor force; New York had 138,424. No other state came close in sheer numbers of artists. In the 11 artist occupations California was the leader in every occupation except dancers, who were most populous in New York State.

Nationally, persons in the 11 artist occupations comprise 1.04 percent of the experienced civilian labor force. On the state or SMSA levels, the proportion of artists in a region's local civilian labor force gives an indication of how active artists are in the economies of each area. When these figures are examined, New York and California show high proportions of artists, as do certain other states. The District of Columbia has a greater proportion of artists in its labor force (1.95 percent) than any of the states. This means that one out of every 51 workers in the District is in an artist occupation. (Some SMSA's have higher concentrations of artists than the District does, however; see below.) New York State is next, with 1.73 percent of all its workers in one of the 11 occupations; California and Hawaii each have 1.55 percent; and Nevada is close with 1.54 percent. In addition to these, states that are above the U.S. average in proportions of artists in their labor force include Alaska, Arizona, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oregon, and Washington State. The lowest proportion of artists in the work force is found in the state of West Virginia, with 0.56 percent, or one artist for every 179 workers.

As noted above, geographic areas also vary in the percentage of artists who are women or minorities. The percentage of artists who are female ranges from 30 percent in Rhode Island to 45.3 percent in Iowa. The U.S. average for female artists is 37.8 percent. Iowa has a high percentage of women in most of the artist occupations, but it is especially strong in female authors with 61 percent women, designers with 64 percent women, and musicians/composers, nearly half of whom are women.

Minority workers (Blacks, Hispanics, Asians, and American Indians) make up 10.7 percent of artists in the U.S. They are distributed among the states in proportions similar to their numbers in the general populations of each state. The highest percentages of minority artists are in Hawaii (49.3 percent), in the District of Columbia (31 percent), and in two southwestern states--New Mexico (22.3 percent) and California (16.6 percent). California has high percentages of minorities in all the artist fields, and it has especially high percentages of minority architects and designers (19 percent), most of whom are Asian or Hispanic. Californian musicians and composers are 21 percent minority: seven percent Black, 11 percent Hispanic, and three percent Asian and other races. New York State's artist population is 12.6 percent minority.

Unemployment among artists averaged 5.5 percent in the U.S. in 1980. Rhode Island led the states in high unemployment among artists, at 9.3 percent, followed by California with 8.6 percent, New York with 8.1 percent, and Nevada with 8.0 percent. Delaware and Nebraska had the lowest artist unemployment rates, at about 2 percent.

Earnings vary greatly among the artist occupations and among the states. The highest paid full-time artists in 1980 were architects in Alaska ($35,000 per year) and musicians/composers in Nevada ($30,700 per year). Alaska led the states in artists' earnings, with a median of $20,833 per year for full-time artists. Michigan was second, with median full-time earnings of $19,464. The high earnings in Michigan are attributable to the more than 9,000 full-time designers in the state who average nearly $22,000 per year. Architects in Michigan are also well-paid, averaging $25,000 per year full time. At the lower end of the pay scale, Mississippi's 3,100 full-time artists averaged $11,100 per year and Maine's 1,500 full-time artists averaged $11,200. The U.S. average was $15,777 for full-time artists in 1980.

SMSA's: The New York SMSA led all others in numbers of artists in 1980, with 102,954 artists in its experienced civilian labor force. The Los Angeles-Long Beach SMSA was second with 77,768 artists, followed by Chicago (37,536), San Francisco-Oakland (29,570), and Washington, D.C.-MD.-VA. (24,979). Los Angeles-Long Beach had the most actors and directors of any SMSA, but the New York SMSA had more persons in each of the other artist occupations.

It should be noted that neither the New York SMSA nor the Los Angeles-Long Beach SMSA is a "pure" representation of the entire labor market of these two major U.S. urban regions. The Census has recently defined a set of larger "Standard Consolidated Statistical Areas" or "SCSAs." One of these combines the New York SMSA, which already includes Putnam, Rockland, and Westchester counties in New York State and Bergen County in New Jersey as well as all of New York City, with additional contiguous SMSA's for Nassau and Suffolk Counties (Long Island); Newark, N.J.; Jersey City, N.J.; New Brunswick-Perth Amboy-Sayreville, N.J.; Patterson-Clifton-Passiac, N.J.; Long Branch-Asbury Park, N.J.; Stamford, Conn.; and Norwalk, Conn. Another SCSA combines the Los Angeles-Long Beach SMSA with the SMSA's for Anaheim-Santa Ana-Garden Grove, Riverside-San Bernardino-Ontario, and Oxnard-Simi Valley-Ventura. To resolve whether greater New York or greater Los Angeles has the most artists, we have estimated the 1980 artist populations for these two SCSA's at 144,693 and 101,472, respectively. By either approach, then, New York City is the larger center of activity in the arts. One out of every 41 workers in the New York SMSA is in an artist occupation, or nearly two and one-half percent of its labor force. This rate is higher than any other SMSA.

Among the large SMSA's examined in this report, the participation of women in the artist labor force is highest in the San Jose area, where 39 percent of artists are women. 60 percent of authors and 55 percent of painters, sculptors, craft-artists and printmakers in San Jose are women. Of the top 25 SMSA's examined, women's participation is lowest in Detroit, where 29 percent of artists are women.

The Miami SMSA has the highest proportion of minority artists among the set of 25 major regions, at 37 percent. Nearly a third of Miami's artists are Hispanic; this group is especially prominent among architects (47 percent Hispanic) and announcers (40 percent Hispanic).

Washington, D.C. and Detroit lead the SMSA's in median earnings of full-time artists. Washington's artists average $21,750 for full-time work. This is influenced mainly by the 2500 full-time architects in the national capital area, who average $31,250 per year, and by the 3800 designers, who average $20,625 for full-time work. All of the artist occupations report higher earnings in the Washington, D.C. area than the average U.S. figures. Government employment in the Washington area is one reason for high artist earnings.[2]

Detroit's high median earnings of $21,346 for full-time artists can be attributed to its well-paid designers, who number nearly 6,000 and who earn an average of $29,297. Designers in the motor city earn nearly double the wages of designers nationwide. Like most well-paid occupations, designers in Detroit are mostly male (71 percent, compared to 50 percent for designers nationwide) and mostly white (95 percent, compared to 80 percent in Detroit's civilian labor force).

The lowest earnings for artists among the 25 SMSA's are in Baltimore and Miami, where median earnings for full-time work are $14,000 per year.

The sources for the appendix tables are the 1980 Census Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) File for population data and statistics on women and minorities, and the 1980 Public Use Microdata Sample (PUMS) "A" data set for unemployment, earnings data, and numbers of artists in the smaller SMSA's that are parts of the large consolidated New York and Los Angeles "SCSA's" discussed above. The industry data are from the PUMS "A" sample for state tables and the PUMS "B" sample for SMSA tables.

State Summaries:

ALABAMA -- Alabama had 11,779 artists in 1980. Over 4,200 of those artists were designers and they worked primarily in retail trade. Artists made up less than 1% of the state's labor force and were a smaller percentage of Alabama's labor force than the U.S. average. Forty-three percent of Alabama's artists were women. This is higher than the U.S. average of 38%. The state had a lower percentage of minority artists than the U.S. average (9.3% compared to 10.7% nationwide). Its 3.7% unemployment rate for artists was considerably lower than the U.S. average. Its median annual earnings for artists were $11,769, about $4,000 below the U.S. median for artists.

ALASKA -- Alaska counted 2,148 artists in 1980. Although this is a small number compared to the other states, artists were better represented in the Alaskan labor force than the U.S. average. Its artists unemployment rate (5.6%) and its percentage of females (39%) were nearly the same as the U.S. average. Minorities made up 8% of Alaskan artists. Median earnings for artists were higher than any other state in the nation -- averaging $20,833 per year in 1980.

ARIZONA -- Arizona had 14,023 artists in 1980 with large numbers of designers working in retail trade, architects in professional services, musicians in theatre and motion pictures, and painters and sculptors spread among many industries. As a percentage of the total labor force of Arizona, artists were better represented than the U.S. average. The state had a low rate of artist unemployment (3.4%), a high percentage of minority artists (13%), and female participation that was near the U.S. average. Median annual earnings for artists in Arizona were $13,785, lower than the U.S. median.

ARKANSAS -- Arkansas had an artist population of 5,468 in 1980, one-third of whom were designers. Most of the designers worked in retail trade. Arkansas had a low percentage of artists in its labor force, compared to the U.S. average. Its artists unemployment rate (5.6%) in 1980 was nearly the same as the U.S. average. Women were better represented (44%) in artist occupations than the national average, but minority representation (5.7%) was lower than the national average. Artists in Arkansas earn an average of $12,095 per year.

CALIFORNIA -- With 176,321 artists in 1980, California had more artists than any other state. It lead the nation in numbers of nearly every artist occupation, ranking second only for dancers. One-third of all actors and directors in the country and one-quarter of all authors lived in California in 1980. More than any other industry, its artists work in entertainment, which employed large numbers of actors, directors, musicians and composers. Designers made up the largest category of California artists and like elsewhere in the U.S., California's designers work primarily in retail trade and manufacturing. California had one of the highest percentages of artists in its labor force among all the states and pays its artists better than most other states. Average annual earnings in 1980 were $17,616. However, the state also had one of the highest unemployment rates in the nation for artists -- 8.6% in 1980. California had a large population of minority artists -- nearly 17% of the artist labor force. Women made up 36% of the artist labor force, similar to the U.S. average.

COLORADO -- Colorado had 17,930 artists in 1980. Artists made up 1.25% of the state's labor force, which is above the U.S. average. It also had an unemployment rate for artists in 1980 that was lower than the U.S. average -- 4%. Its percentage of female artists (38%) was identical to the U.S. average, but artists' earnings in 1980 were below the national median at $14,265. Minorities made up 7.4% of Colorado's artist population. Most of its artists worked in professional services and retail trade.

CONNECTICUT -- The artist population in Connecticut in 1980 was 17,211. The state was above the national average in its percentage of artists in the labor force. It was also well above the national average in artists' earnings. They had median 1980 earnings of $17,054. The unemployment rate for Connecticut artists was very low at 2.9%. Women made up 37% of the artists labor force and minorities made up under 5%. Most of its artists worked in professional and business services and manufacturing.

DELAWARE -- Delaware had 2,288 artists in 1980. This was less than 1% of its labor force and below the national average for artists' labor force participation. Delaware's 1980 unemployment rate for artists was the lowest in the nation at 1.9%. The state had relatively high participation by women in the artist labor force (41%). Minorities made up 7% of artists. Average annual earnings in 1980 for artists were $13,125. This was below the national average. Like most other states, Delaware's artists worked primarily in professional services and retail trade.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA -- The District of Columbia counted 6,247 artists in 1980. Although it is not a state, it has more artists than many states with nearly 2% of its labor force in artist occupations. Most of its artists were in the designer occupation, but it also had many architects, authors, painters and sculptors. Most of its artists worked in professional services in 1980 although a large number also worked in the entertainment industry. Nearly one-third of the District's artist were minority and 39% were female. Its 4.7% unemployment rate for artists in 1980 was below the national average. Its $17,500 average annual earnings for artists was well above the national average.

FLORIDA -- Florida ranked among the top five states in total numbers of artists in 1980 with 48,302. It was third in the nation in numbers of dancers and fourth in numbers of announcers and musicians/composers. Most of the state's dancers and musicians worked in the entertainment industry; its announcers worked in radio and television broadcasting. The percentage of artists in Florida's labor force was above the national average in 1980, but earnings for artists were more than $2,000 below the national average at $13,498 per year. Minority representation was very high (14%) and female representation was the same as the national average (38%). Only 4% of Florida's artists were unemployed in 1980.

GEORGIA -- Georgia had 20,330 artists in 1980. They made up less than one percent of the state's labor force, which is below the U.S. average. Women and minorities were well represented among the state's artists. Women made up 43% of artists and minorities made up 10.5%. Georgia had an unemployment rate of only 3% among artists in 1980. Like most other states, Georgia's artists work primarily in professional services and the retail trade industries. Its 1980 median earnings of $14,020 was below the U.S. average.

HAWAII -- Hawaii had 6,753 artists in 1980 and a high percentage of artists in relation to the size of its labor force. The state was seventh in the nation in numbers of dancers. The entertainment industry is a major source of work for artists -- especially dancers and musicians. Thirty-nine percent of Hawaii's artists were female. Hawaii's median earnings for artists in 1980 were above the U.S. average at $16,339. It's unemployment rate was below the U.S. average at 4.7%.

IDAHO -- Idaho's artist population numbered 3,207 in 1980, with its percentage of artists in the labor force below the national average. Minorities were only 2.6% of the artist labor force, while women made up 38%. The 1980 unemployment rate for artists was 3.7%. Median earnings for artists were higher than the U.S. average at $16,324 per year. Retail trade, radio and television broadcasting, and architectural services were major employment areas.

ILLINOIS -- With 50,467 artists in 1980, Illinois ranked fourth in the nation in total artist population. It had the third largest number of authors of any state. More than a third of its artists were designers and they worked primarily in the retail trade and manufacturing industries. In spite of the large number of artists, they were represented in the state's labor force at a rate less than the national average. Minority and female participation in arts occupations was at the national average -- 11% minority and 37% female. Artists' earnings in Illinois were well above the U.S. average in 1980 at $17,526 per year. The state's 1980 unemployment rate for artists was a moderate 4.4%.

INDIANA -- Indiana had 17,439 artists in 1980 and artists were in the state's labor force at a rate considerably below the national average. Indiana had a high percentage (42%) of women among its artists and 4.4% were minority. It had a low unemployment rate (3.1%) for artists in 1980. Median earnings were $13,884 per year in 1980; this was about $2,000 below the national median earnings for artists. More than a third of Indiana's artists were designers, most of whom worked in retail trade.

IOWA -- Iowa's artist population numbered 9,395 in 1980. It is an unusual population in its high percentage of women. Artist occupations in Iowa averaged 45% female, which was the highest level of female participation of any state in the nation. It was especially strong in female designers with 64% women, authors with 61% women, and musicians/composers, nearly half of whom were women. Like most other states, the designer occupation was the largest artist occupation in Iowa and most of the designers worked in retail trade. Median earnings for Iowa's artists were below the national average in 1980 at $13,276 per year. The unemployment rate was 4.6%. Minority artists represented less than 3% of artists. Overall, artists made up a lower percentage of Iowa's labor force than the national average.

KANSAS -- Kansas counted 9,377 artists in its 1980 population. The state had a high rate of female participation in the arts -- about 43% were women. Less than 4% were minority. Median earnings for artists were $14,365 in 1980. Its artist unemployment rate was low at 2.3%. The largest artist occupations were designers, painters/sculptors, and architects.

KENTUCKY -- Kentucky had 10,446 artists in 1980, with more than 40% women. Minorities were less than 4% of the artist labor force. The 1980 unemployment rate was 5.5%. Median earnings for artists in Kentucky were well below the national average -- under $13,000 per year. Artists' representation in Kentucky's labor force was also below the national average.
